Vintage 1967 NASA Apollo Saturn V S-IC Artifact F-1 rocket quick pin release. 1967 NASA Apollo Saturn V Rocket S-IC / 1st Stage Artifact. Kennedy Space Center, Ground Support Equipment, F-1 Rocket, Boeing, Quick Pin Release. This artifact was designed for the Apollo program, specifically for the Saturn V First Stage (S-IC), Rocket Propulsion System. The Boeing Company manufactured this S-IC hardware, as the primary contractor for the Saturn Rocket's First Stage. This Quick Pin Release was made to attach to a "REMOVE BEFORE FLIGHT TAG" associated with the F-1 Rocket Engine Cluster. It would then be removed prior to launch at the Kennedy Space Center, Vehicle Assembly Building. This hardware originally came from the NASA Boeing Michoud Facility in Louisiana and was later stored at KSC. The pin is a hollow cylinder of high strength steel with a central precision rod, relieved with a mechanical cam, which allows manual operation of a precision steel ball. This ball prevents the pin from accidentally sliding out of the restraining position. The hook tag attachment point shows evidence of oxidation due to many years of storage in East Coast facilities.
